DEALING WITH POND PREDATORS

by Carol Henry, The Koi Pond, Panama City, FL

Our worst predators here at The Koi Pond have been a kingfisher, green herons and racoons. The easiest one to scare away was the kingfisher. We put an owl decoy on the fence and that was the last we saw of the kingfisher. He had been getting three square meals a day here for a month. That was four years ago.

A green heron finds us every summer and, although the majority of our ponds are protected with bird netting, he manages to feed upon several of the Koi fingerlings from our unnetted converted swimming pool/pond and our demonstrator ponds. The green heron is not just a wading bird. To the amazement of my husband and myself, they are capable of diving into the pond for their fish. To date, we have found no solution other than netting for this predator. You need to keep the water well below the netting, because this bird will peck and stab a fish through the holes in the net. This summer was the first in four years that no green heron took up residence here. I wonder if it had anything to do with the fact that we now have two live cats that spend their days outside among the ponds. No, the cats do not bother the fish!

The netting is also very effective for racoon problems. For the ponds that are not protected by netting, I have found moth balls to be equally effective for racoons. Hide two or three moth balls under a rock ledge, plants, etc. to completely ring the pond. You don't need to apply so many that the odor keeps you away from your pond. Two or three balls every four to five feet are sufficient. Don't forget to replace with new balls after the rain has dissolved them because the racoon or its relatives will continue to check your pond periodically.

Because of the numerous ponds, marshes, lakes and swamps that dot the Florida panhandle, fish-eating birds are everywhere. One customer of ours solved his bird problem by nailing lattice material to a wooden frame supported by four-by-four posts and then draping an old shrimp net over the top. He has the shrimp net draped to touch the ground. The enclosure is large enough for lawn furniture to be placed inside. In effect, he created an outdoor room with ceiling and walls to keep the predators out and his fish in the pond. He has had no more problems with birds eating his fish. For racoon control, I would tack down the net with tent pegs so they can't crawl under.

We also employ rubber snakes (much to the dismay of many of our customers), a blue heron decoy, a concrete alligator, and a crushed stone cat to defend our fish from attack. ♡
